THE MARCHERS.

We had our summer, slothful and We had our summer, slothful and serene;
We had our summer, slumberously sweet;
Now, where soft-slippered dancers had their scene.

If he to th hard-shod feet!
Left-right! Left-right!
Tears behind the grin.
You march not through the Avenue;
You're tramping in Berlin!
Left-right! Left-right!
Swing and swing and swing,
No stones of town where your faceme down.
But the harder heart of a King!

But the harder heart of a King!

Lo! Like an organist at the pedal key, Each foot shall strike a chord upon the ground

Till the toned thunder, passing under sea,

Breaks with a doomsday sound!

Thud and thud and thud;

Each heart and drum of a host to come,

You forefront of the flood!

O sir, smile on the line.

Where, gun by gun, your only son Goes laughing by with mine.

They go not forth another's gods to break;

They go not forth another's gods to break;
They are not traders, selzing what they can.
But liberty's evangels, sent to make The world safe for man.
Left-right! Left-right!
Hit and hit and hit!
The hearts of the dead shall feel that tread
And beat to echo it;
Left-right!
True and true and true!
The sun hands down his victory crown!
"Forward!" God's word to you!

—John O'Keefe, in New York World.

SPORTSMEN IN PARADISE.

They left the fury of the fight,
And they were very tired;
The gates of Heaven were open quite.
Unguarded and unwired,
There was no sound of any gun,
The land was still and green;
Wide hills lay silent in the sun,
Bue valleys slept between.
